INERP 2.0 - New website, new era

The Institute for Regulatory Policy Research (INERP) announces the launch of its new website at www.ierp.gr.

INERP's new digital space aspires to serve as a hub of administrative knowledge and public debate. At www.ierp.gr, visitors can find articles, studies, analyses and interventions on public administration and public policies, as well as research and qualitative data, to understand and document social and institutional developments and challenges in Greece. INERP also plans to organise webinars, open discussions and events that will enhance the participation and contribution of citizens, researchers and public officials in various thematic areas.

INERP was established in 2010, with the aim of becoming an institutional pillar of evidence-based thinking, research and administrative memory. Drawing on the experience of struggling civil servants and contemporary social sciences, INERP has highlighted the need for a new type of public administration, founded on transparency, accountability, informed decision-making and anti-popularity reforms.

The new INERP period (INERP 2.0) marks the transition to a growth phase. New and old partners join forces to continue to cultivate administrative and practical knowledge that will help defend the rule of law, democracy and administrative dignity in a world facing complex challenges and rapid change.

INERP'S website www.ierp.gr is available to every researcher, public official, institution, journalist and citizen who shares the vision of a just, efficient and progressive public administration and local government. We invite you to visit it, browse its content and become part of a community of thought, research and intervention for an institutionally shielded public space, open to accountability and resistant to clientelism.
